S. Hsu, N. Perry : Lessons in Sustainable Development from Malaysia and Indonesia (Comparative Studies of Sustainable Development in Asia) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Lessons in Sustainable Development from Malaysia and Indonesia (Comparative Studies of Sustainable Development in Asia):

Sustainable Development in Malaysia and Indonesia examines a range of topics pertaining to sustainable development in the two countries. While Indonesia and Malaysia are geographically close, Indonesia lags behind Malaysia in terms of well-being, with a lack of social services, and economic indicators, as GDP per capita is lower than that in Malaysia. Environmental problems are similar, since both possess large amounts of biodiversity and natural resources. Hsu and Perry provide a concise overview of sustainable development in the nations, make policy recommendations for each country, and discuss sustainable development experiments in both countries.
