Knox and Butzel don't just have a bibliography, they give you the URL right in the text. You can read this book in front of your computer monitor! Your surfing will take on new meaning as you link to other useful information. The model "Finding Your True North" is the best I have seen. User friendly to career voyager and counselor alike, it integrates the best of the past and creates something new. The Spiritual Autobiography activity is a powerful career assessment tool. This is one of many useful exercises to help you put your plan together. These two seasoned career professionals have woven a new garment, bringing career development process to life and clothing us with the best of the internet's career resources. Bravo!

Chapter 7 of 7 people found the following review helpful. A Career Builder for the 2000's By A Customer I have started to keep Life Work Transitions.Com close at hand. There's so much good stuff here that I keep going back for more; turning over in my head what I've read; and looking forward to sections that I have not gotten to - yet. Whether you're in the midst of a transition or trying to make sense of the constantly changing world of work and how you fit in, this book has the breadth and the depth to help you tackle the job. I like the tie-in to the Web site; but I like even more the balanced perspective that the two authors bring to the table. The book is both high tech and high touch, which in this "fast company" world of ours, we all need. This is a keeper.

About the Author Sandy has had a long standing interest and knowledge in the sociology of work, career development and education. In 1984 she applied this knowledge as Internship Coordinator for the Women's Center for Continuing Education at Lasell College. She went on to form her own counseling practice Decisions for Positive Change. For fourteen years she has counseled men and women of all ages and professions. She adds computer and internet expertise to her counseling, and uses the internet with clients for research and as an intuitive tool to help them think "outside of the box."

Deborah L Knox: Deborah is a pioneer leader in the field of career and life work planning for over twenty years. She received her early training with John Crystal, co-author of Where Do I Go From Here With My Life?, and formed Crystal Associates of New England in the early 1970's to introduce this model program. In 1980, she established Deborah L. Knox Associates to work with individuals and organizations where she combines her interests in psychology, spirituality, self-employment, coaching and leadership development. She is a consultant at Polaroid Corporation and a certified coach from the Coaches Training Institute.
