Leo C. Bacino : Reconstructing Russia: The Political Economy of American Assistance to Revolutionary Russia, 1917-1922 before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Reconstructing Russia: The Political Economy of American Assistance to Revolutionary Russia, 1917-1922:

In an original and stimulating manner, Reconstructing Russia focuses on the Wilson administration's efforts to find some way to provide economic support to Russian Siberia as a counterpoint to German economic influence. The connection between the Wilson administration's efforts to provide economic assistance in Siberia and the Marshall Plan becomes even more significant at the close of the twentieth century as contemporary debates are waged over the issue of economic assistance to the former Soviet Union. Bacino places Wilson's Russian policy in a new light and examines it from a government-wide perspective. The author analyzes several significant issues and gives a fresh look at one of the most confusing episodes in Wilsonian foreign policy.
